Words of Encouragement

“Be still and know that I am God.”
(Psalm 46:10)

All too often I have spent my time in prayer pouring out my heart to God, letting Him know of my needs and desires, of my hurts and doubts. I have confessed my sins and thanked Him for His grace toward me. Then, I have risen from my knees and gone about my business.

A common mistake many of us make about prayer is to think of it primarily as a monologue. We tend to consider only our part of the conversation. We talk to God, thinking that once we let Him know what we need that our prayers are done. No true conversation takes place when only one party is speaking. It takes two to have a conversation, and when we pray, we need to learn to listen as well as speak. We should not be content with filling the air with our words. We must also attune our ears to listen, for God is always speaking to the heart that quiets itself enough to listen.

“God has a plan for our lives, and surrendering to Him means we set aside our own plans and eagerly seek his.”

We need to practice “silence” as part of our praying, because it’s not what we say but what God says to us and through us that matters. Of course we are not listening for an audible voice. Instead, we listen for a voice that arises from the quiet depths of the heart. There is nothing weird or scary or overly mystical about learning to listen to God. It is not about “hearing voices” but about becoming attuned to His quiet inner nudgings. It is about the conviction that comes when we quiet all our restless thoughts and worries, tune out the many distractions, and just listen to what God communicates in the deep interior of our soul.

Without a doubt, we’ll need God’s help to teach us to listen, as it goes against many of our natural tendencies, but it is a skill I am convinced He wants us to learn. As Jesus reminds us in John 10:27, “My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me.”
