Words of Encouragement

August 30, 2026

“Teach us to number our days, that we may gain a heart of wisdom.” (Psalm 90:12)

Moses wrote this psalm late in his life, after leading Israel through the wilderness for forty years. He watched an entire generation pass away. He understood, more than most, how quickly time moves. And so he prayed: teach us to number our days.

We were created for a purpose, and a calling that's bigger than our comfort. Our time here on earth is the space in which that calling unfolds. Those who never learn to number their days spend their days as if this life is all there is. But when we learn to number our days, we see each day as a valuable gift and an opportunity to store up treasure in heaven (Luke 12:33). To number your days means we must live wisely and learn to ask better questions: Is this how I want to spend today? Does this choice reflect what I truly value? Am I living in a way that honors God and the life He's given me?

To number your days doesn't mean being anxious about the clock. It means being intentional. It means making room for what matters and letting go of what doesn't. It means prioritizing relationships over distractions, obedience over comfort, and faithfulness over performance. Every season, every moment, every opportunity is part of God's design. Our job is to live faithfully within the time He's given us. It's not about cramming more into your schedule or measuring your worth by how much you accomplish. It's about alignment. It's about making sure that how you live matches what you believe.

“God has a plan for our lives, and surrendering to Him means we set aside our own plans and eagerly seek his.”

The godly wisdom needed to “number our days” is not something we naturally possess—it is a supernatural gift of God's Spirit that He develops in us through faithfulness in prayer, reflection, study, and devotion to Christ. Surrendering our lives to His Lordship is the initial step in acquiring true wisdom (1 Corinthians 1:30).

May Moses's prayer in Psalm 90 be a daily reminder to live wisely and purposefully, keeping God's kingdom as our highest priority, and to prepare ourselves and others for an eternity with God!
